Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice,
Science, and Related Agencies

Dear Chair Shaheen and Ranking Member Moran:

As you consider the Fiscal Year 2023 appropriations bill for this subcommittee, we respectfully write to request at least $130 million in funding for the Youth Mentoring Grant, which is administered by the Department of Justice’s Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP). This program is the only mentoring-specific line item in the federal budget and supports the implementation, delivery, and enhancement of evidence-based mentoring services. These services improve outcomes and ensure that at-risk and underserved youth have the support needed to thrive personally, academically, and professionally.

Mentoring provides young people with evidence-based intervention that enhances life outcomes for young people and mentors. It is a powerful strategy to reduce the number of youth disconnected from school and work, and keep youth from entering the juvenile justice system. In addition, mentoring can increase social and economic mobility and help create a more productive and prosperous nation. But, one in three young people in the United States will not have a mentor at some point in their childhood—constituting a “mentoring gap” that demonstrates the need for collaborative investment in mentoring services.

At its core, mentoring provides young people with consistent, stable adults in their lives when they need it most. Nationwide, of the young people being served by mentoring programs, 51% of them are low-income, 36% are academically at-risk, 14% are first generation to go to college, and 8% have incarcerated parents or family members. Quality intervention, like mentoring, can also divert youth from engaging in repeat criminal offenses. Recent research funded by OJJDP found that mentoring programs potentially provide a benefit of three times the public expenditure for every day in jail that program participants avoid. However, as the percentage of higher-needs youth in a program increases, so does the average cost-per-youth. These programs require additional funding. As programs continue to provide for young people who need the highest levels of support, funding for the Youth Mentoring Grant program must increase to meet their needs.

In addition, mentoring promotes positive social development and behaviors in young people. With youth in America facing serious challenges related to substance abuse, mental health, and the effects of trauma—all exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic—a trusting relationship with an adult can help them navigate complex and difficult issues at home, at school, and everywhere they go. For example:

- Mentoring programs can prevent and help youth cope with depressive symptoms, reduce mental health stigma, and increase treatment entry and adherence.
- School-based mentoring programs can have a positive impact on truancy and absenteeism, scholastic efficacy, school-related misconduct, and peer support.
- Mentoring can be integrated into multi-component violence prevention and intervention efforts, reduce aggressive behaviors such as fighting, bullying, and delinquency, and provide comprehensive support to youth at risk for committing violence or victimization.
- Mentoring programs can support youth in career exploration and early employment experiences by providing social-emotional support and hands-on skill-building, which can lead to higher retention rates, wage increases, and professional development.
- Mentoring programs can reduce the likelihood that youth start to use illegal substances, nonprescription drugs, and alcohol.

Despite the clear benefits of youth mentoring, the average mentoring program has 63 young people on their waitlist – and recent reports and studies have found that inflationary costs and workforce shortages due to the COVID-19 pandemic have prevented a full recovery in the nonprofit sector, including youth mentoring programs. This increase in funding for the Youth Mentoring Grant helps close the mentoring gap and create meaningful relationships that will help youth recover and put them on a track to academic, personal, and professional success.

To that end, we respectfully request at least $130 million in critical funding for the Youth Mentoring Grant program, which will save federal dollars over the long-term by reducing rates of incarceration, bolstering student academic achievement, and enabling positive health and psychosocial outcomes for young people.

Thank you for your consideration of this critical request to support our at-risk youth.

Sincerely,
